Ich nutze den Jot Pro nicht super-intensiv, habe also keine richtige Härtest-Erfahrung, aber bislang sind mir keine Kratzer aufgefallen. Was Macdrifter in seiner Besprechung des Jot Flip schreibt, scheint mir sehr bedenkenswert, v. a. die letzten zwei Sätze:

Zitat

I have read in the Adonit forum of at least two people complaining that the stylus scratched the glass of their iPad. I believe it. I also believe Adonit's position, which is that there was fine debris on the glass that actually got caught between the stylus tip and the glass. They argue that the scratches were caused by these particulates and that they also scratched the tip of the Jot. I'd recommend not using the stylus if you treat your iPad like an animal. [...] [The capacitive disks are replaceable \[Anzeige\]](#). I'm guessing I will have to replace mine regularly. It's a piece of hard plastic rubbing against glass. It's going to wear down. On the Brinell hardness scale, glass is going to beat polycarbonate.
